My Favorite Room

We invited design professionals to choose a room they've designed that they particularly love—or one that has become a favorite of ours. The idea is to slow down and look closely at one space, from the floor plan and color palette to the fabrics, wood, furnishings, and all the small details that bring it together.

This space, once dark and dreary, has been transformed by generous fixed glass panels.

Bath With A View

One of my favorite rooms to design is this Primary Bathroom, transformed from a dark, dated space into a retreat that celebrates its setting overlooking the Severn River.

The transformation began with the windows. Casements were replaced with expansive fixed-glass panels, flooding the room with light and opening the space to the river. The former separate tub and shower became a walk-in wet room, creating a spa-like environment where routines feel more like moments of escape.

Porcelain surfaces mimic stacked stone, slate, and warm wood, delivering the beauty of natural materials with durability and ease of maintenance. Quartz countertops resemble concrete, petrified wood mirror frames add warmth, and cast-resin sconces create a glow.

Even the soaking tub became an opportunity for problem-solving. When a cast-concrete tub proved impractical, a cast-resin alternative captured the handcrafted aesthetic without structural modifications.

The result is a space that feels like a bright sanctuary, where the beauty of the river, the materials, and the design transform rituals into an experience.
